

JOTT™ LAUNCHES VOICE CALENDARING ON GOOGLE™ CALENDAR

SEATTLE, WA December 5, 2007. Jott Networks today announced the ability to create Google™ Calendar appointments while away from the PC – using one’s voice.

Jott.com’s free voice-to-text service will link users directly to Google Calendar after a simple set up. Users may also elect to receive an SMS confirming the calendar entry.

Jott Networks CEO, John Pollard, commented, “Having the freedom to make Google Calendar entries with any cell phone is what Jott’s all about—making it simple to get more done. Our customers told us they wanted this functionality, and we’re delivering. We believe anyone who uses Google Calendar should take advantage of being able to post appointments – completely hands-free – from anywhere.”

When prompted “Who do you want to Jott?” the user will simply say, “Google Calendar,” and then speak their appointment information. For example, the user would say, “Meeting with Erin at 9 a.m. November 16th,” and the notation will automatically be transcribed and posted to Google Calendar with the correct date and time.

Pollard added, “Google Calendar complements all of the great things people are already doing with Jott. Whether creating Jott reminders about an upcoming to-do, or capturing ideas for holiday gifts, people are using Jott to get more done every day.” He added, “Our customers literally tell us that Jott is ‘life-changing.’”

About Jott:

Founded in 2006 and headquartered in Seattle, Washington, Jott.com is a free service for any cell phone which helps make individuals more productive and efficient by instantly capturing ideas, sending messages to others, and more without use of a keypad. www.jott.com